大作文范文 1——双边讨论

Some people believe that it is best to accept a bad situation, such as an unsatisfactory job or shortage of money. Others argue that it is better to try and improve such situations. Discuss both sides and give your own opinion.

Undesired situations happen to everyone. Some may accept the current circumstance rather than endeavoring to change it, whereas others differ in opinion. By analyzing both views in this essay, I will present my own opinion.

Convincing argument can be made that more opportunities will be brought about with the breakthrough of unsatisfactory status quo. To begin with, changing an environment is more likely to fulfil one's potential. More specifically, a wrong job is usually the barrier laid on the way to exert one's ability. By devoting to a right job instead of being trapped in helpless reality, a person is more likely to reap a harvest with his passion, interests, and talents in the new field. In addition, a great stride can be made in our career path with improvement in spare time. To be precise, if one is not satisfied with current situation, the most effective method is getting recharged. Promotion and higher incomes all stem from the enchantment of capability, the immediate outcome of training and learning beyond routine work.

Admittedly, in terms of individuals who have already lived a decent life, the acceptance of reality is more appropriate for them. As is widely believed, learning to be contented leads to more well-being. To be more exact, regarding a comparatively wealthy life, lowering expectation usually comes along with less anxiety and fatigue. Pursuing happiness from what is already possessed, such as family, friends, or hobbies, is a remedy for greed. In other words, people are supposed to cherish what they have but not always struggle for what they want.

In sum, despite accepting unsatisfactory reality is a wholesome life style for the rich, changing undesirable circumstances is beneficial for most people, since it contributes to the realization of potential or higher positions. The complication of this issue requires our caution and respect to deliver long term benefits for those currently at bottoms of life.

大作文范文 2——优缺点

Countries are becoming more and more similar because people are able to buy the same products anywhere in the world.

Do you think this is a positive or negative development?

Purchasing products of nearly all brands from one shopping mall is nothing new in contemporary society. I personally think this increasing similarity is a positive development.

Recently this trend of globalization contributes to the well beings of all individuals. The foremost benefit is that demands have been fulfilled everywhere in the world. For example, regarding international trips, we are often not adaptable to local life styles, such as diets or accommodation. But the standard services and management of international chain hotels and restaurants offer nearly identical tastes and surroundings, not affected by geographical regions or cultures.

Moreover, life quality is greatly enhanced. More precisely, mixed with local and imported brands, the current market gives everyone more choices with superb and diversified commodities. Everyone can have an access to cutting-edge electronic equipment, luxury fashion, and exotic cuisine in local shopping malls without going abroad.

On the other hand, some bad effects can be brought through opening-up. It is argued that global integration hampers the progress of domestic industries. As is known for us, compared with mature systems of invading brands, local enterprises generally have a long way to catch up the champions. Because of their low competitiveness ranging from marketing strategies to customer services, local budding star-ups are wrecked in the fierce competition before they have time to improve themselves. However, the drawbacks could be avoided if local government give enough supports by adjusting trade policies or temporarily increasing tariffs.

In conclusion, despite the hazards of local industries' bankruptcy, the similarity among countries is literally favored by almost all people due to convenience and improvement that everyone is enjoying.

Giving detailed descriptions of crime by newspaper and television, someone says it could make bad consequence; this kind of media should be restricted. To what extent do you agree or not agree?

The detailed report of crimes has become a common topic in the newspaper as well as a popular program on the TV. Some say these contents are supposed to be restricted because of negative impact they would incur, but I hold an opposite perspective.

To start with, it is undeniable that the sense of security is more likely to be raised with the public aware of happening crimes. To be exact, criminals, such as forgers or fraudsters, keep changing methods to obtain illicit profits by utilizing hi-tech devices under the cover of emerging concepts. Traps won't be found until these tricks are exposed by media. In other words, the more details are reported, the quicker reactions will be taken to malicious intentions.

Moreover, detailed description of crimes is a deterrent to outlaws. More specifically, as a result of people's increasing recognition of surrounding illegal behaviors, the success rate of committing crimes reduces and lawbreakers are more likely to be put into jail with their tricks seen through. Potential offenders who used to take chances, hence, will give up fluke mind, getting back on track and returning to normal life.

Last but not the least, since many unlawful acts come from ignorance, the spread of crime details, as popularization of knowledge, contributes to more self-regulation. For example, cases of juvenile delinquency will reduce when youngsters know severe outcomes their casual behaviors may give rise to. Understanding the criteria of defining illegal acts enables individuals to review what they did and make a better choice of what they will do.

In sum, it is not necessary to put excessive restriction, as reporting crime details is conducive to enhancing the safety consciousness, deterring criminals, and people's behavior regulation.

Many young people today leave school with a negative attitude towards learning. Why is this? And what can be done to encourage a positive attitude to learning in young people.

Learning seems not an attractive topic among youngsters who just graduated. This essay will analyze reasons of this phenomenon and explore measures to improve this situation.

learning-weariness arises due to many factors. The foremost is that learning is often regarded as a highly cost but low efficient investment. To be precise, new graduates are often confronted with an embarrassment that what they learn is not so recognized as practical experience of someone with lower education background. Meagre salary beating pride, it is hard for a person wealthy in knowledge but deprived in living to keep the enthusiasm of learning. In addition, the process of learning seems vapid with regard to the current rapid life pace. More specifically, quick feedback has become a standard to evaluate whether something is worth doing. But traditional educational methods and concepts always require nothing but repeated practice and long-term insistence. Reaping fast-rewarding happiness by switching between entertainment programs and social apps, young people tend to give up sowing in learning.

However, positive attitudes can be fostered if corresponding solutions are carried out. In terms of low salary, subsidies approved by city councils are supposed to be an effective method. To be exact, the money not only helps young people tide over the inevitable difficulty at the stage of just graduating, but also shows esteem towards their knowledge. Graduates, hence, will feel respected owing to their academic achievement, and realize the importance of learning in return. Also, a larger proportion of government budget should be allocated to the upgrading of teaching methodology. Accurately speaking, redesigning syllabus is not just about knowledge, but more about mode of presentation, application of multimedia elements, and even psychological guidance. Like online games which is full of interaction and feedback, the future learning mode will undoubtedly arouse the young's interests of learning.

In sum, young people's disappointment and tiredness to learning lie in imperfect social welfare systems and the insipid education status quo, but both can be improved through policy adjustment.

In some countries, owning a home rather than renting one is very important for people.

Why might this be the case?

Do you think this is a positive or negative situation?

It has been a global common view that owning a property rather than living in a leased one is essential for contemporary people. This essay will endeavor to analyze reasons behind this idea and discuss its impact.

There are many factors leading to the increasing desire of purchasing properties. The foremost one is that real estates are most powerful weapon to fight against currency depreciation. To be exact, since inflation is a constant threat to the working-class who occupy the majority of society, they tend to keep the value of possessions by investment. As has been proved in the history, the most convenient approach of hedge is purchasing properties, whose rocketing prices defeated inflation rates most of the time. Moreover, in many cultures, owning a home is a prerequisite of marriage. Specifically speaking, along with youth's phobia to increasing economic pressure, a boy usually has to prepare a home before becoming a husband, because he has to show the ability to afford household burdens, at least a stable place to live in after marriage. In other words, a property is often regarded as a token of responsibility and stability.

Both pros and cons come with the prevalent sense of home purchasing. On the one hand, a country's economy can be boosted drastically in a short period. More precisely, the whole industrial chain, from construction to sales, benefits from real estate booming. More job opportunities are provided, more raw materials are transported, and more transactions are completed. The more money flows, the more prosperous the market is. On the other hand, however, an increasing number of individuals may lose consumption power for a long time. To be accurate, youngsters pushed to buy homes generally have meagre savings. Housing mortgages, therefore, have become the only option, an enormous debt to be paid back in the following decades. Unless their incomes enhance substantially, they will long be trapped in loans, just making ends meet, letting alone other consumptions.

In sum, both economic pressure and customs stimulate the housing boom, bringing about short-term rapid economic growth of a nation and longtime financial burden for many young people.

Car ownership has increased so rapidly over the past thirty years that many cities in the world are now ‘one big traffic jam.’

How true do you think this statement is? What measures can governments take to discourage people from using their cars?

During the last 3 decades, the prosperity of global economy comes with the booming of automobile industry. The exponential growth of car numbers brings the challenge of congestion to nearly every authority in the world. This essay will analyze the current situation and propose some measures governments may take.

Traffic congestion has already become a worldwide problem. The most noticeable influence is reflected in increasing commuting time. To be exact, as is widely known, the original purpose of inventing cars was providing a flexible and efficient approach of travelling. But what happens now is that an increasing number of individuals, especially commuters and students, have spent more time on the way to companies or schools because of the long waiting time in front of red lights at peak time. Also, a large proportion of current roads is under overload operation. More precisely, the enormous number of cars is beyond the expectation of architects who designed existing infrastructure. News of road damage, even bridge collapse, arising from overburdening can be seen and heard from medias every day.

Regarding these problems, there are many measures governments may take. The most immediate one is to improve existing public transport. Specifically speaking, if buses or rails are equipped with more comfortable seats and air conditioners, the public will be bound to take public transport more frequently, reducing the number of private cars on the road. Consequently, the density of automobiles is more likely to decline. Another choice is the construction of intercity fast rails. More accurately, as the phenomenon of working in one city and living in another has become prevalent, outdated highways are now severely congested areas. Intercity fast rails are now crossing-city commuters' preference owing to exclusive tracks and high speed, which eradicate traffic jam between cities. The pressure on highways also reduces with more people choosing rails.

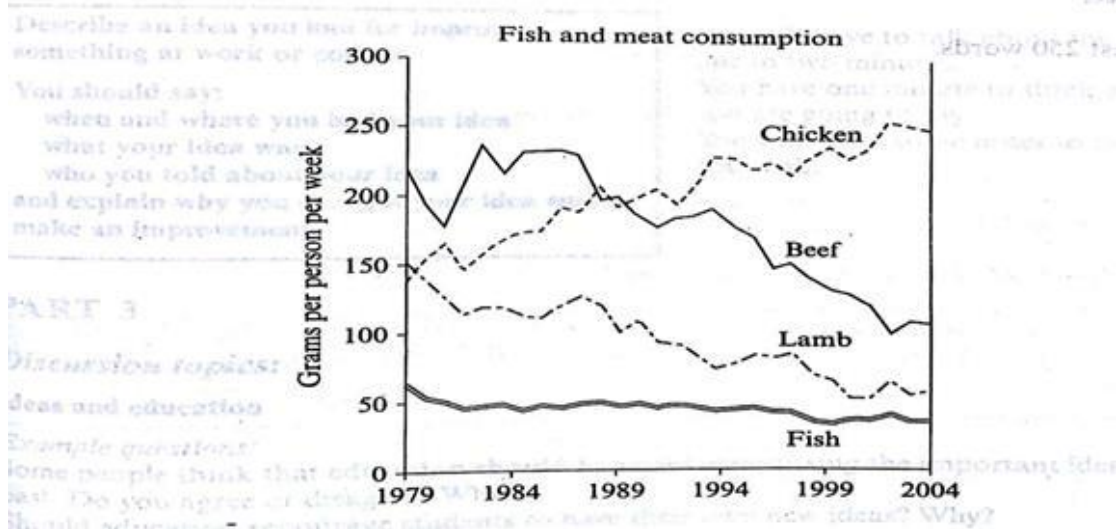

In sum, long commuting time and overburdened infrastructure have both warn us about traffic jam, and the government have many choices to alleviate this problem, such as improving existing public or constructing new fast rails between cities.

The graph below shows the consumption of fish and some different kinds of meat in a European country between 1979 and 2004.

Summarise the information by selecting and reporting the main features, and make comparisons where relevant.

Write at least 150 words.

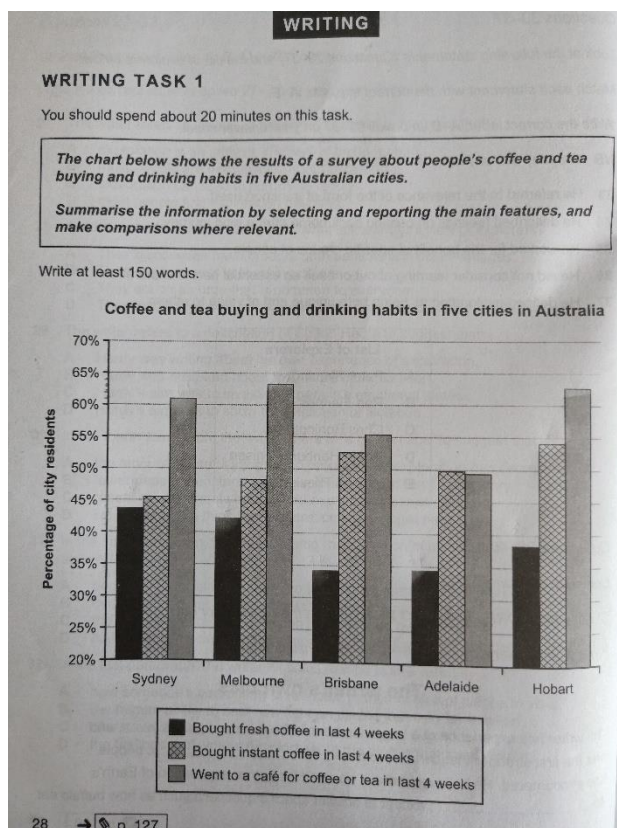

The line chart reflects the weekly consumption of fish, lamb, beef, and chicken per person in a European country from 1979 to 2004.

As can be seen from the chart, the period witnessed dropping trends in the weekly consumption of beef, lamb and fish. More exactly, as the least one, the consumption of fish had a mild and stable decline from about 60g to just below 50g per person. Differently, regarding the most popular meats in 1979, beef and lamb had consumptions of about 230g and 150g at the beginning, both dropping obviously by about 90g in spite of an evident rebounds of beef in 1980 and two small ones of lamb in 1988 and 1998.

In contrast, chicken was becoming increasingly welcomed during the period. To be exact, the consumption of chicken was less than 150g in 1979, but it surpassed that of lamb in 1980 then that of beef before 1989. Despite many small fluctuations, the figure peaked at 250g per person after 2000, which slightly slid down in but still ranked the top in 2004.

The bar graph describes the outcome of a survey about buying and drinking habits of tea and coffee among individuals in five capital cities in Australia during last 4 weeks.

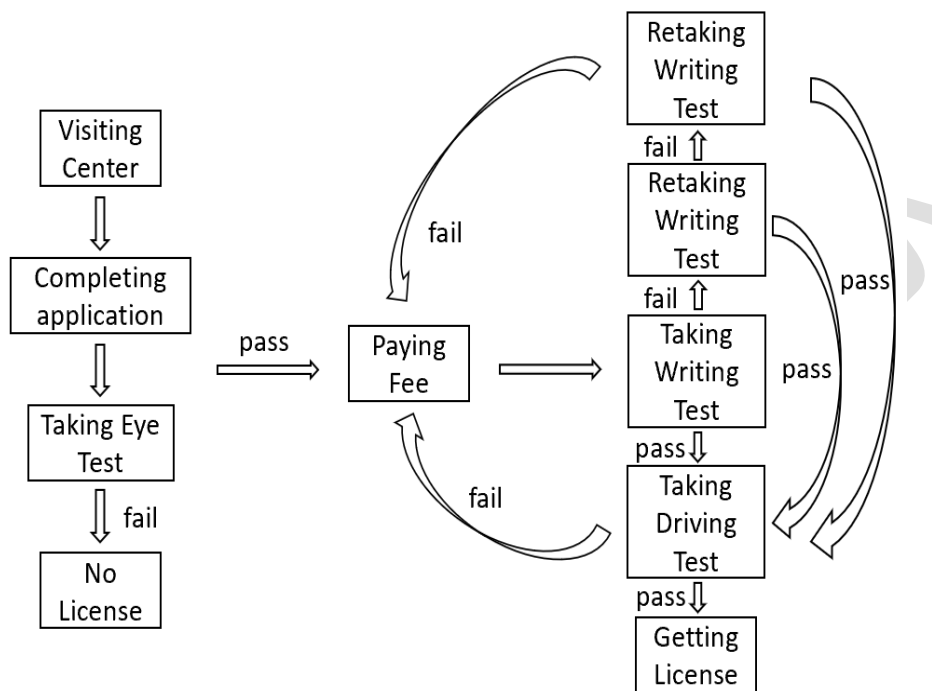

As can be seen from the graph, the proportions of who bought fresh coffee were all the least in these cities. To be exact, the lowest rates were in Brisbane and Adelaide, under 35%, and the figure in Hobart was a little larger, about 38%. Although fresh coffee seemed more popular in Sydney and Melbourne, people who bought them only occupied less than 45%.

The graph also indicates that instant coffee was second popular one in all the cities except Adelaide, where instant coffee was the most welcomed. More precisely, compared with those of fresh coffee, the ratios of instant coffee in Sydney and Melbourne were slightly higher, just above 45% and less than 50% respectively. But ratios of instant coffee in Brisbane (52.5%), Adelaide (50%), and Hobart (nearly 55%) were all at least 15% higher than those of fresh coffee.

According to the graph, the best-seller in most of the cities was the drinks from café. Specifically speaking, people drinking in café apparently took up a larger part of over 60% in Sydney, Melbourne, and Hobart, but only 55% and under 50% of them did the same thing in Brisbane and Adelaide.

The diagram below shows the procedure of getting a driving license in the US. Summarize the information by selecting and reporting main features, make comparison where relevant.

The flow chart describes the procedure of applying for driving license America.

The whole process contains mainly two stages. At first, applicants need to complete application form after arriving at visiting center, and pass eye test before they are eligible to pay fees. After payment comes the second stage, in which there are two successive tests, a writing one and a driving one. If everything goes smoothly, applicants will acquire license eventually.

However, if applicants fail any of the tests, there will be corresponding troubles. The most serious one is the eye test in stage one, the failure of which directly terminates the application process. Differently, in stage two, there are always chances. If someone fails all the 3 chances (the first time and two additional tries) of writing tests and the only chance of driving test, he still can re-pays fees to re-start stage two.

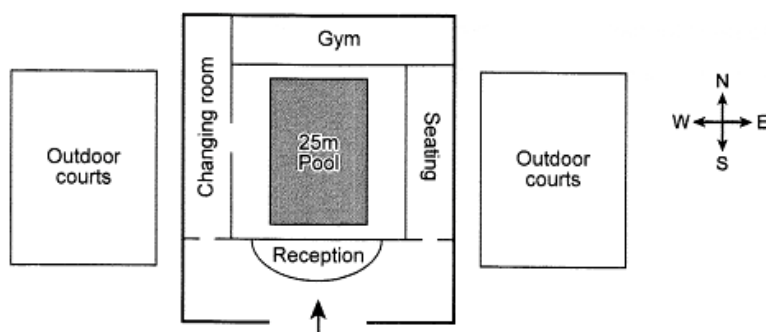

In sum, procedures of getting driving licenses are actually divided into two parts. One always has the possibility to acquire it unless he cannot pass the eye test.

The plans below show the layout of a university's sports centre now, and how it will look after redevelopment.

Summarise the information by selecting and reporting the main features, and make comparisons where relevant.

UNIVERSITY SPORTS CENTRE (present)

UNIVERSITY SPORTS CENTRE (future plans)

The pictures below show how a university's sports center looks like now and the its planned layout in the future.

The first picture shows the present condition. To be exact, the sports center consists of 3 parts: one indoor hall and two outdoor courts on the west and east of it. If one gets into the hall from the south of the building, the reception is just in the front. Behind the reception is a 25m pool, with a changing room, a gym, and a seating area on the west, north, and east around it respectively.

As can be seen from the second graph, the outdoor courts will be parts of the indoor hall in the future. More specifically, the central area will remain the same except the gym, which will extend to the east. There will be a sport shop on the left of the entrance, and a café on the right. Besides, the western court will turn into a leisure pool, while the eastern court will be mainly used as a sports hall, both of which will have changing rooms on the south side. Also, two dance studios will appear on the eastern edge of the plan.
